Are the younger generation of Singaporeans growing up to be less physically fit than their fathers? Young people are now spending so much time on the internet and computer games that it has now become an obsession. Are we now a generation who exercise only their fingers and are not as fit as we should be? These questions are circulating in the online forums as Singaporeans grapple with the cause of the recent death of two young men.

A full-time national serviceman and a trainee pilot had both collapsed and later died during training. Their deaths are being investigated. Although sudden cardiac arrest may only hit someone with an underlying heart disease, doctors have said that a person's physical fitness level may affect the likelihood of him succumbing to this condition. Whatever your age, exercising and having a balanced diet remain crucial factors in keeping a healthy lifestyle.

Hence, many people are now pondering whether the younger generation are not as tough as the older generation who can survive poorer living conditions.

That day, like every other day, Anthony expected to walk straight to his class on the fourth floor to deposit his bag before running back down to the field to play baseball with his friends. However, as he ran across the courtyard, he noticed a boy shuffling away from the rest of the crowd. There was a hole in his bag which he covered with his right hand. No one would want to be seen with a hole in his bag. Anthony noticed that the boy's hair was dishevelled and his shirt was not tucked in. Anthony was disgusted that the boy did not seem to be bothered by how unkempt he looked. 5

Turning away, Anthony was about to call out to one of his classmates when someone ran past the boy, pushing him roughly. The boy lay stunned for several seconds on the ground. Everyone seemed to avoid him like a plague. Anthony himself stood by to watch with a mixture of fascination and amusement as the boy put on his shoes which had somehow fallen off when he fell. He tried to pick himself up. He was so scrawny that the heavy bag seemed to throw him off balance and he had to try several times before he finally stood up. It was then that Anthony realised that the boy was limping. He was holding something black in his hand. It was the sole of his left shoe. He had uneven legs and one of his shoes was thicker than the other. 10 15

There were smirks and sniggers around as everyone just stared at the boy. Anthony walked towards the boy and gestured him to remove his left shoe. At first, the boy hesitated. Then, with trembling hands, he gave his shoe and the sole to Anthony. Squatting on the ground, Anthony slipped the sole into the shoe and shook it vigorously. When he was satisfied that it had stayed in place, he handed the shoe to the boy. Without waiting for the boy to slip on his shoes, Anthony strode off with his head held high. Deep inside, he wished his friends had witnessed his kind deed. As he climbed the stairs, one of his friends called him. He waved nonchalantly to his friend who was running towards him. 20

"Why did you do that?" asked his friend. To which, Anthony shrugged hoping to look indifferent. To avoid prolonging the conversation, Anthony pointed at the toilet and told his friend that he would meet him downstairs. Anthony ran to the toilet and locked himself in a cubicle. His face had turned red and tears welled up in his eyes. He hoped his friend had not seen this. He then stared down at his right shoe and wriggled his toe to feel the additional sole he had actually glued to the bottom of the shoe so that it would never fall out. No one knew about his physical disability. 25 30

"This is it, I am not going to wallow in self-pity anymore!" declared Anthony. He took a deep breath and came out of the cubicle, ready to face the world. He was determined to deal with his disability and accept his situation. Somehow his attitude towards his physical disability changed after helping the boy. "My friends need to know about my situation and accept me for who I am," Anthony told himself. 35
