A Guide to Keeping Your House Clean and Tidy

by Naomi Kwan 30 July 2023

Are you tired of living in a messy and cluttered house?

Has housekeeping always seemed like a laborious task to you?

If your answer is "Yes" to these questions, read on!

A clean and tidy home is essential for your mental and physical well-being. Here are a few simple tips and tricks to get you started on transforming your living space into a welcoming sanctuary!

Declutter and Organise

The first step towards a clean and tidy home is decluttering — remove anything you no longer need or use.

What should you do with these items?

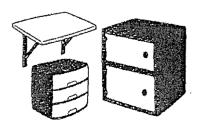

- Donate items in good condition
- Recycle suitable items
- Dispose of the rest responsibly

Once you have decluttered, it is time to organise the remaining items and designate a place for each of them. Take a moment to compare how much storage space you need with what is available. You would need to set up a system for keeping your belongings neat and tidy, using shelves, cabinets and containers.

Maintain the System

After decluttering and organising, be careful not to clutter your house again! Get into the habit of returning items to their designated places once you have finished using them. Before purchasing a new item, ask yourself whether you really need it and have space for it. You can always consider renting or borrowing it instead. If you decide to go ahead with the purchase, but there is limited space, you may apply a simple "one out, one in" rule – get rid of an item before you bring a new one into your home.

Clean Regularly

Establish a weekly routine that works for you. It should include chores like dusting, vacuuming, mopping, cleaning toilets and changing bedsheets.

If you spread them out and just do one daily, you will find it less tedious. Windows and most household appliances require cleaning less often, probably every few months.

Make Housekeeping a Team Effort

Talk to your family members and involve them by assigning tasks and setting expectations. Get young children to take charge of their own belongings and clean up after themselves. You can also inject some fun by playing some upbeat music while you do housekeeping or turning it into a healthy competition to see who can clean up the fastest!

In recent years, the beaches along Singapore's coast have occasionally witnessed a stunning natural phenomenon where waves glowed blue at night. This is caused (29) the marine plankton, dinoflagellate Noctiluca scintillans, which emit a blue light (30) they are agitated. Commonly known (31) sea sparkles, they are single-celled organisms that feed (32) other plankton in the water.
To survive in the water, the plankton have developed (33) extraordinary mechanism: they emit a blue light. The sudden flash of light startles predators, making it difficult for them to locate and capture the plankton. Not only does it
(34) a blinding effect on the predators, it also attracts prey.
(35) does it do so? Well, the light acts as a beacon, sending a strong signal to the nearby organisms. The unsuspecting organisms are (36) lured towards the plankton. This increases (37) chances of finding food.
(38) this glow may be beautiful, there could be harmful impacts on our ecosystems. The presence of the plankton may lead to a reduction in the oxygen supply in the water, therefore suffocating other organisms. Scientists are monitoring this phenomenon closely.

After the morning hustle and bustle, the atmosphere at Taichung's main market quiets down as all but one stall shut for the day. The stallholders return home at midday, leaving a lone lamp shining on a fruit stall. Mdm Yang Siew Yin silently sorts out the fruits from the carton boxes as she attends to the occasional customer. Years of manual labour have taken a toll on her health, for Mdm Yang now walks with a limp. Despite that, she hardly sits down to rest and never complains. Her fingers, gnarled and curled, and hardly ever at rest, are also evidence of her many years of hard work.

Mdm Yang, who is nearly 70, lives alone. She leads a contented life. Every day, she wakes up at three, and makes her way to the fruit wholesaler by six. Religiously, she opens her stall at the market before daybreak and tends to it for the next twelve hours. Being the first to arrive there and the last to leave, she has earned the respect of all the other stallholders who reverently gave her the title "Market Chief". Her life revolves around her stall which she inherited from her father at the age of twenty. To maximise profits and keep herself active, she manages the stall single-handedly. Having come from a disadvantaged background herself, she feels for the poor. Mdm Yang lost her mother before completing her primary school education. Stricken with cancer, her mother had chalked up huge hospital bills and her father had to borrow from kind-hearted neighbours to settle them. Observing the hardship that her parents had gone through, Mdm Yang made up her mind at a tender age to help the needy once she was able. A decade ago, she donated a large sum of money to her alma mater, Tai Yao Primary School, to set up a fund for pupils to obtain financial aid. She donated another sum to build a library there too. Since then, Mdm Yang has been helping schools, orphanages and poor children.

Recently, a renowned international magazine selected Mdm Yang as one of the "Unsung Heroes of Philanthropy" winners of the year. The editor wrote, "Of all that she has given away, her greatest gift is a genuine heart of gold." In spite of being the recipient of the prestigious award, all Mdm Yang really cares about is her fruit stall. She has unwittingly become a celebrity in her neighbourhood. She was perplexed when fans turned up at the stall, hoping for a picture with her. Even as she smiled at them, she felt that it distracted her from her work. To those who asked Mdm Yang about her award, she would shrug her shoulders casually, showing little enthusiasm, saying, "I have done nothing extraordinary and everyone who wants to can do it." She added that she did not place great importance on money and felt blessed whenever she donated.

Mdm Yang's ability to donate such large sums of money has led many to ask how a mere fruit seller could earn so much money. Mdm Yang does not crave material gains. All she needs are food and a place to sleep. "Work is my sole enjoyment," she said. "If not, how would I be able to work such long hours daily?" Even when customers want to tip her, she refuses to accept. She explains that when customers buy from her stall, it is already a form of support. Her philosophy in life is simple, "True contentment is not having everything, but in being satisfied with everything you have."
