Learning Something Important

Emma and her brother Jake always argued. One day, they fought about whether turtles needed water to live. “Of course they do!” Emma said. “No, some turtles live on land!” Jake argued.

Frustrated, they decided to look it up on the computer. They found out they were both right—some turtles live in water, while others, like tortoises, live on land. Surprised, they laughed and agreed to check facts before arguing next time.

A week later, their mom took them to a pet store. They saw a tank full of baby turtles swimming and another area with tortoises walking on land. Remembering what they learned, Emma and Jake explained the difference to their mom.

Their argument had turned into an important lesson: facts matter, and learning before speaking is always better. From that day on, they didn’t argue as much. Instead, they worked together to find the truth, making their bond stronger.
