Making a Difference

John was just an ordinary sixth-grader who loved to read and play soccer. But every day at school, he saw something that bothered him. Mike, the biggest bully in school, picking on smaller kids. John had always been too scared to do anything. He didn't want to become Mike's next target.

One afternoon, John saw Mike pushing a younger boy, Ben, against the wall, demanding his lunch money. Ben's eyes filled with tears, and John knew he couldn't stay silent anymore. Summoning all his courage, he stepped forward and said, "Stop it, Mike! That's not right."

Mike laughed at first, but then a teacher noticed the situation and stepped in. Mike got in trouble, and Ben thanked John for helping him. From that day on, John decided to stand up against bullying. He talked to his classmates, and together, they started an anti-bullying club. They made posters, shared stories, and encouraged others to be kind.

By the end of the year, bullying in their school had decreased. Even Mike changed, realizing that being mean didn't make him strong. John learned that making a difference starts with one brave choice, and he felt proud to stand up for what was right.
