Showing Courage

As I stood backstage, I could hear the murmurs of the audience filtering through the curtains. I was about to give a speech in front of the whole school, and I was not confident to do so. Just a few days ago, I had filled out a registration form to participate in the school's annual public speaking competition, and now the moment of truth had arrived.

At first, I felt encouraged by my friends, who had been supporting me throughout the preparation process. Two of my classmates, in particular, had been a great source of motivation, constantly telling me that I could do it. They had even come backstage to wish me luck, and their reassuring words had given me a much-needed boost.

However, as I began to walk towards the stage, I became nervous. My heart was racing, and my hands were shaking. But I decided to try and push through my fears. I took a deep breath, reminded myself of all the practice I had done, and started to speak. At first, my voice trembled, but as I continued to talk, I gained confidence.

When I finally finished my speech, I felt an overwhelming sense of pride. It was a proud moment for me, as I had faced my fears and overcome them. I did not give up, even when I felt like running away. As I walked off the stage, I was met with applause and congratulatory messages from my friends and teachers. It was a truly exhilarating experience, and I knew that I had shown courage in the face of adversity. From that day on, I felt more confident in my ability to tackle challenging situations, and I was grateful to my friends for their support and encouragement.
